General Vance,

I am writing to provide a formal update regarding the partnership between Brighthouse Industries and the West Coast State Military.

I am aware of the frustrations your department has expressed concerning the delays in the finalization of the Project Aegis contract. I want to personally assure you that Brighthouse remains fully committed to delivering the drone-interception array as promised.

While Jackson Lake's signature is the final technical requirement for the Master Service Agreement, he is currently "re-evaluating" certain ethical parameters of the kinetic-strike capabilities. As you know, Jackson is a brilliant engineer, but his recent… hesitation… is a temporary bottleneck. He is currently on a brief, non-communicative retreat to handle "internal visioning."

I will secure the signature you need by the end of the week.

Regardless of Jackson's current state of mind, I have the full backing of the Board to ensure this $400M contract does not slip through our fingers. We understand the strategic importance of the West Coast defense perimeter, and I will not let a single man's burnout compromise our national security—or our company's fiscal health. Please prepare your team for the final signing ceremony on Friday. I will have the documents executed, one way or another.

Respectfully,

Albert Longman Chief Operating Officer, Brighthouse Industries
